Course description

This 10-day course is a capabilities-based planning course that uses strategic planning models to collect and analyze planning elements and leadership behaviors in terms of risk and hazard evaluation, and a project management model to track resource allocation and project capability gaps. Strategic elements are presented in case-study context. Project management uses concepts of community risk reduction and preparedness to increase individual and group capabilities to manage critical tasks successfully. Note: Precourse reading and activities are required.

Selection criteria

Chief fire and EMS officers and personnel identified as part of the organization's/local government's decision making team, or those involved in interorganizational strategic planning, project management, or succession planning elements of the organization. Special admission is available for local government managers and planners attending with a chief officer. Groups of students from the same organization attending the same session are encouraged and must submit their application at the same time.

Prerequisites

ICS 100 level and ICS 200 level training. Preferred courses are Q462 and Q463 available through NFA Online at www.nfaonline.dhs.gov. Chief's signature attests that the applicant has completed this required training.
